

Emma Andersen-More

DIRECTOR AND CO-FOUNDER

Emma co-founded Tactician 6 years ago after a long career in both large and small consulting firms and organisations. The goal was to create a consulting business in the people space that was different – that left the fluff behind and provided the pragmatic real-world solutions that business leaders wanted and needed.

Her experience as senior human resources leader, consultant and line manager equipped her perfectly to achieve this goal and she is proud that Tactician have built a reputation for exactly the type of work intended.

Emma developed an auto-immune disease several years ago, which has left her no longer able to actively contribute to the business. Her critical thinking and ability to see opportunities for improvement, as well as her keen eye for design, mean however that she is still regularly sought out by the team for her opinion – which she thoroughly enjoys giving at every opportunity (even when she's not asked for it!)

Because of her condition, Emma is unable to be very active these days. She still has a passion for food and travel, as well as being the butt of many jokes for her affinity with cats, of which she has two and is quite happy to admit that they are her children.